water and a little soap somehow also works.

Soap doesn't not contain abrasives like toothpaste so won't polish out the minute scratches headlights get after a few years smacking bugs.

Grammatically incorrect. Assuming what you meant to say is: 'nobody has time to do any of that.' What you just said means 'everybody has time to do that.' Also the word 'for' has an 'r' on the end

Dimitar Burgatov commented:

You trolling, sophie? or just plain stupid?! And yes I know, the word You should have a "'re" at the end. (Also it's 'AT the end', not 'ON the end') - Point is, when you want to make a comment online, check that what you’re correcting isn’t a reference for something, such as... say... the infamous Ain't nobody got time fo that video, watched and loved by millions.

Actually no, it would not be 'you're'. Since you're asking if she's trolling rather than stating that she is, it would be 'Are you trolling
Sophie?', not 'You're trolling Sophie?'

Point is, when you correct someone's grammar, even your own, make sure your correction is correct.

Hahahaha...

You fell into your own trap. Since you seem to be hell-bent on being an arse, we'll take a look at what you wrote.

The question, 'Are you trolling Sophie?' would suggest that we're asking a second party whether or not they are trolling a third party called Sophie.

If we want to ask Sophie whether or not she's trolling another person, we need to add a comma after 'trolling', right?

At the end of the day, when you tell someone to check their grammar before correcting someone else's grammar, you should... check... your... own... correction... first.

I think it's clear that Sophie was just trolling. However, you were genuinely attempting to correct someone else.

I'm not going to say that my grammar is 100% perfect but you shouldn't be making an elementary mistake like leaving out the comma.

Your statement should have read: "I'm not going to say that my grammar is 100% correct, but you shouldn't be making an elementary mistake like leaving out the comma" which is EXACTLY what you left out! Comma after "but" since both parts of the sentence can stand alone as a sentence! Kind of elementary, my dear!

Teresa Mackey • 12 days ago

Actually, the comma would be before "but."

Teresa Mackey • 14 days ago

As my omitting the comma doesn't affect the meaning of the sentence in any way, it would be nitpicking to say that I have to insert a comma.

In her case, she has to insert a comma or the whole meaning of the sentence changes.

The usage of commas where the meaning of the sentence doesn't change is widely debated and open to interpretation. In contrast, the area I highlighted is not really open to debate at all, is it?

Teresa Mackey • 12 days ago

To help your argument with comma usage, take these sentences for example.

1. I helped my uncle Jack off a horse.
2. I helped my uncle Jack, off a horse.

There's two completely different meanings for each sentence. LOL

Teresa Mackey • 14 days ago

Technically the correct way to write that sentence would be: "Sophie, are you trolling?".

Teresa Mackey • 13 days ago

Two sides of the same coin, mate.

Actually in this case you would say it's 'ON' the end of the word, not 'AT' the end of the word. Using 'AT' would give the impression of adding AFTER the word.
For example:
'ON' = you're.
'AFTER' = you re.
Get my drift Dimitar Burgatov? Not so smart now are you.

Looks like he used the cornmeal treatment on his nethers. Hope it doesn't fall off.

That bulge of his looks very abnormal. A sock in his bulge is what it looks like.

agreed, but the rest of his body looks very nice. I don't care if it's real or not because I'm just looking, but very pleasant on the eyes :)

If you think that's a sock, I feel sorry for you. And much sorrier for whoever you are intimate with. There is nothing out of ordinary parameters going on in the front of his underwear.

Someone correcting them online may be the only time their grammar is pointed out to them as wrong. How else will they learn?

Mae Wilborn → sixholdens • 13 days ago

I would hope they were taught in school. That isn't something addressed just once or twice in school but every year of their schooling.

sixholdens → Mae Wilborn • 12 days ago

Teachers are too busy teaching the multitude of required tests to bother with teaching the course work.

Actually they do teach such things, problem is no one at home cares if they learn it and since those at home didn't finish school, they don't practice it either.

Kasey Rose → sixholdens • 5 days ago

That's bull. I was taught proper grammar in school!

Freeman Dryden → sixholdens • 7 days ago

People in grass houses shouldn't stow thrones: PRACTICE is a NOUN; the VERB is PRACTISE
Most people here are American, mate. American English doesn't give parameters for that, and it's definitely not taught in schools.

Great! worse after, five years later, no one will know how to write! Nice way of thinking!

Your language wasn't so perfect either. Though I daresay it's considerably better than my French would be.
